

Education Research Symposium

📅 24 & 25 October 2024

📍 ACU North Sydney Campus

#AISNSWEvidence

Who should attend?

The Education Research Symposium is a pivotal event designed specifically for future focused educators who champion evidence-informed school cultures. It is tailored to those who aspire to expand their knowledge, question assumptions, and establish meaningful connections with peers who share their passion for educational advancement. You should attend if you are:

- a dedicated educator committed to fostering evidence-informed practices.
- a school leader striving to enhance student outcomes, pedagogy, and overall school wellbeing.
- an academic or researcher interested in bridging the gap between theory and real-world educational impact.

Why should you attend?

Building on the success of previous years, the 2024 Symposium aims to reestablish the significance of school-based research within the ever-changing educational landscape. By attending, you will:

- collaborate with educators, visionary school leaders, and accomplished academics from across Australia.
- explore the profound influence of research on various facets of education, including student outcomes, teaching methods, leadership strategies, and the broader school community.
- engage in critical discussions and adaptation of educational practices to ensure their continued relevance within your school's unique context.

In a world where educational practices are constantly evolving, it is crucial to interrogate and adapt these practices to ensure they remain contextually relevant for your school and students.

Conference Highlights

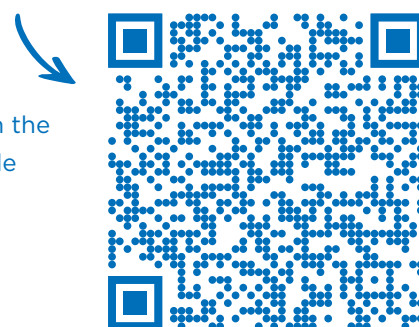

Prepare to broaden your horizons, challenge preconceptions, and acquire innovative approaches through a dynamic array of engaging presentations, compelling keynotes, expert panel discussions, and immersive workshops led by renowned researchers and educators. You will also have the valuable opportunity to network with like-minded professionals, gaining insights from their experiences and expertise.
